from which point there was a daily decline to Sz. 19 1-2 d. at the close. Futures also declined correspondingly.

The change was mostly speculative on the exchanges. The innences at work causing it were various, but expecially the disappointment caused by the high beet crop estimates put out by experts and the statistical figures resulting showing a pientiful supply of sugar for the demands of the new campaign year October 1, 1906, to October 1, 1907.

Also an important influence is the expectation of a full crop of sugar in Cuba notwithstanding some damage done to came fields in the districts of Matanzas and Havana by the recent cyclone. It is realized that there is an abundance of cane in other districts which can be ground with the extra assistance of laborers from the shorter crop districts.
